

Bradley Christ

Director, Behavioral Health Services (BHS)

Bradley Christ serves as the Director of Behavioral Health Services at Federal Occupational Health, a component of the Program Support Center (PSC) within the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services. In this capacity, Brad is responsible for managing and providing the PSC team with the resources necessary to support customer agencies with a variety of occupational health services.

These services include the Employee Assistance Program (EAP); organizational development and leadership — which includes organizational development, leadership coaching, individual and team coaching, executive development, career coaching, and more; psychological testing and evaluation program; and WorkLife programs. The services are provided for federal employees and agencies throughout the United States and abroad.

Prior to joining PSC in 1999, Brad worked as a commercial diver and a diver-medic on the oil platforms in the Gulf of Mexico. He then worked for several environmental and safety consulting companies in and around the Washington, D.C., area. He enjoys the challenges that PSC faces in working on a fee-for-service basis and competing against commercial consultants. He is proud to support the PSC mission and strives to provide quality services to federal agencies.

Brad is a member of the American Society of Safety Engineers. He holds an associate's degree in underwater technology from Florida Institute of Technology and a bachelor's degree in industrial technology from the University of Maryland.
